DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

The factual inquiries set forth in Graham v. John Deere Co., 383 U.S. 1, 148 USPQ 459 (1966), that are applied for establishing a background for determining obviousness under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) are summarized as follows:

1. Determining the scope and contents of the prior art.
2. Ascertaining the differences between the prior art and the claims at issue.
3. Resolving the level of ordinary skill in the pertinent art.
4. Considering objective evidence present in the application indicating obviousness or nonobviousness.

Claims 1-37 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Li et al. (Li), U.S. Patent 6,190,528 in view of Kupferberg et al. (Kupferberg), U.S. Patent 3,226,628 or Sweatn, U.S. Patent 5,532,894.

Li discloses a known electrodeionization module using conventional DC to obtain purified water (see col. 3, lines 20-66). The reference does not disclose the converting of the power from the AC source into stable DC power.

The Kupferberg patent is cited to show a conventional power interface for converting the AC into stable DC (see col. 2, lines 22-46). The reference further discloses limitations to the transformer, phase-controller and rectifier as claimed, with the amplifier (see figures 2-6 and columns 3-6).

The Sweaton patent shows another conventional power interface for converting AC into stable DC (see abstract). The patent further discloses limitations to the transformer, phase-controller and rectifier as claimed with the amplifier (see figure 3-4 and columns 5-6).

Consequently, the invention as a whole would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the disclosure of the Li patent with the teachings of the Kupferberg or Sweaton patents, because both the Kupferberg and Sweaton patents teach conventional power interface for converting AC into stable DC.
